CHAPTER I .- (Continued.) On a lounge an elegantly dressed woman was sitting, reading a novel "La, child!" she cried, "come here and give me a kiss. So you wear that sweet-fancied suit again. Is that the Dutch style, then, child? It must be extremely charming. La, here comes Richard! He is going to ask you to take a sail on the river; and I shall lend you my new green parasol. I do believe it is the only one in the coun-with my worsteds. Perhaps my mother-might not like me to go on the ing to consider that such days are the river with-any one."

But Katherine had no time to de fend herself; for, with his cavalry cap in his hand and a low bow, Capt. Hyde entered the room, in a few minutes afterward she was going down the terrace steps with him; and thoughts to the pretty daughter of the he was looking into her face with shinner that it seemed to her as if her feet acareely touched the low, white steps, and she was some sort of glorided Katherine Van Heemskirk, who never, never, never could be unhappy again.

They did not go on the river. Capt. Hyde did not want a third party near, in any capacity. The lower steps were shaded by great water beeches, and the turf under them was green and warm. A sweeter hour, a lovelier maid, man could never hope to find; and Capt. Hyde was not one to neglect his opportunity.

"Let us stay here, my beloved," he whispered. "I have something sweet to tell you. Upon mine honor, I can

The innocent child! Who could blame her for listening to it?-at first with a little fear and a little reluctance, but gradually resigning her whole heart to the charm of his soft. syllables and his fervent manner, until she gave him the promise he begged for-love that was to be for him alone, love for him alone among all the sons of men.

What an enchanted afternoon it one golden moment after another!

"The vera air o' this room is gun powdery," thought the elder; "and ane or the other will be flinging a spark o' passion into it ,and then the dell will be to pay. I'll e'en tak' the lasses hame mysel'; and I'll speak to Joris for his daughter-as good now as any other time."

Then he said in his blandest tones. Joanna, my dearie, you'll hae to tell Neil the rest o' your tale the morn; and, Katherine, put awa' now that bit o' busy idleness, and don your hoods and mantles, baith o' you. I'm going to ta' you hame, and I dinna want to

While he was speaking, Nell left the room. He was glad to escape from a position which he felt to be both painful and humiliating. He was in a measure Capt. Hyde's host, and subject to traditions regarding the duties of that character; any display of anger would be derogatory to him, and yet how difficult was restraint So his father's interference was welcome one; and he was reconciled to his own disappointment, when, looking back he say the old gentleman slowly taking the road to Van Heems kirk's, with the pretty girls in their quilted red hoods, one on each side of

The elder was very polite to his charges; but he noticed that Katherine was silent and disappointed, and that she lingered in her own room after her arrival at home. Her subsequent pretty cheerfulness, her delight in her lilles, her confiding claims upon her father's love-nothing in these things deceived him. He saw beneath all the fluttering young heart, trembling, and yet happy in the new, sweet feeling, never felt before, which had come to it that afternoon.

But he thought most girls had to have this initiative; it prepared the way for a soberer and more lasting affection. In the end Katherine would perceive how imprudent, how impos sible a marriage with Capt. Hyde must be; and her heart would turn back to Nell, who had been her lover from boyhood. Yet, he reflected, it would be well to have the matter understood, and to give it that "possibility" which is best attained on a money basis.

So, while he and the Van Heems discussed the matter-a little kirks reluctantly, he thought, on their part-Katherine talked with Joanna of the Gordons. Joanna had not a suspicion of the joy and danger that had come to the dear little one at her side. She was laughing softly with her, even while the fearful father stood at the closed door, and lifted up his tender soul in that pathetic petition, "Ach mija kind! mija kind! mija liefste kind! Also, in her father's case, the mo tives influencing his decision stretched backward through many generations. None the less was their influence po tent to move him. In fact, he forgo entirely to reflect how a marriage be tween his child and Capt. Hyde would be regarded at that day; his first thoughts had been precisely such thoughts as would have occurred to a Van Heemskirk, living two hundred years before him Joris' age was not an age inclined to analysis, and he was still less in clined to it from a personal standpoint. For he was a man of few, but positive ideas; yet these ideas, having once commended themselves to his was! how all too quickly it fled away, faith or his intelligence, were embraced with all his soul. "Katryntje, my daughter, call not to-day, nor call not any day, until I tell you different, at Madame Semple's. The people who go and come there, I like them not. They will be no good to you-Lysbet, what say you in this matter?"

"What you say, I say, Joris. The father is to be obeyed. When he will not, the children can not."

Katherine had drawn her chair close to her father's and taken his big hand between her own and was stroking and petting it; then as she answered she leaned her head upon his breast. "Father, I like to see the English sterner, and he gently withdrew his hand from her clasp, and rose as a man pressed with affairs. When he had left the room Lysbel instantly began to order the wants of the house. Katherine still sat at the table; her eyes were cast down, and she was arranging-without a consciousness of doing so-her bread crumbs upon her Delft plate. Roused from her revery she comprehended in a moment how decisive her father's orders were intended to be. Yet in this matter she was so deeply interested that she instinctively made an appeal against them. 'Mother, my mother, shall I not go once more to see Madam Gordon? So kind she has been to me! She will say I am ungrateful, that I am rude, and know not good manners. Yes, mother, I may go once. A young girl does not like to be thought ungrateful and rude." "More than that, Katherine; a young girl should not like to disobey a good father. You make me to feel astonished and sorry. Here is the key of the best parlor; go now and wash carefully the fine china-ware."

So Lysbet turned and left the room She did not notice the rebellious look on her daughter's face, the lowering brows, the resentment in the glance that followed her, the lips firmly set to the mental purpose. "To see her lover at all risks"-that was the purpose; but how best to accomplish it was not clear to her. She lifted the key given her and went to the parior. It was a large, low room, with wainscoted walls, and a big tiled fireplace nearly filling it. WHY HE SAID "PANTS."

Rather Fine Distinction in Language Used by New York Tailor. Ex-President Gates, of Amherst college, says the New York Times, was a man with three salient charac teristics-bellef in compulsory worlanguage, and a fondness for bargain hunting that was almost feminine. As illustrative of the latter it is told that bought for $3 a pair of trousers that had been marked at $6, and had them charged. The first of the month the "To one pr. pants, $3." Mr. Gates crossed off the "pants" and substituted "trousers," then re mailed the bill. The first of the next month another bill came in:

"To one pr. pants, $3," This time the bill was returned as before, but with the following leg-"Dear Mr. Thompson: I am always careful about the language use, and like other people to be the same." The first of the third month Mr. Gates received a bill: "To one pr. pants, $3."

This time he went in person to visit Mr. Thompson. He explained his po sition. Thompson looked at him a moment, and then replied:

"President Gates, I've been in the ciothing business for 25 years. An' during them 25 years everything in my shop above $5 has been trousers and everything below $5 has been pants. It's pants you got, and egad, sir, it's pant you'll pay for,"

ODDEST OF ALL FADS Lovers of the Day Seek to Have Their Pictures on Sweethearts' Shoes. It is said that the fashionable gir of the present day carries the picture of the young man she most loves in her shoe and the secret of her hear may therefore be learned by looking at her feet. There is nothing occul-about it. Hypnotism, mental telepa thy and things of that sort are no concerned. If the girl is up to date all you have to do is to look at her feet, for there you will see the pic ture of the happy man. She wears it in the buckle of her slipper, so that the best time to learn truth is when she is at a dance At a function of the kind in Wissable kon recently a half dozen of the girls their sweethearts at their feet, which, according to amatory tradition is right and proper.

When the miniature fad originated the modish girls were pleased to wear the counterfeit presentments of their courtiers at their necks. Then they moved to the belt buckle, but it la the prerogative of a woman to change her mind, and man is once more lowered.

Already the new fancy is gaining supporters and many slipper minia-tures are being made with the portraits of "matines idols." This is for the accommodation of those girls who have not yet succeeded in finding a man to admire at close range.

Sound Reasoning It has been said of a southern darky that he has not always a clear idea as to property rights, but on some points it appears that he is not in the least hazy. As an old colored man in the days

"befo' de wah" was given one of his master's cast-off hats, which he wore with great pride. One Sunday his master met him coming home from a camp meeting in a pouring rain, bareheaded and holding his hat under his coat. Later on his master questioned him focosely. "Why didn't you wear your hat, Jerry? Did you feel the need of cooling your head?" "You see it's like dis, sah," responded Jerry. "My head is yours, but my hat is mine, and nachelly I feels like taking care of it, sah."

Books Bound in Frogskin. Skins of frogs are used occasionally n bookbinding, but in the fantastic, 'precious' sort-used, in a word, as chicken skin was used in fan making in the time of Carlo Van Loo. Frog skins makes a very fine and soft leather and in dyeing it will take the most delicate colors. Hence, it is in laut in circles and stars for centerpleces into the calf or the crushed evant of sumptuous book covers, and it makes a very striking and beautiful decoration. Several noted binders have achieved some of their best effects by the judicious employment of frogs' skins as a decorative agent.
